

UCSUR's Brown Bag Speakers Series Presents...

Who Benefits from Collaborative Planning? Reclaiming the East 185th Street Corridor in Cleveland.

Jordan Yin, Ph.D.

Director of Undergraduate Program, Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs, Cleveland State University, Cleveland, Ohio

Friday, October 17th

Noon-1:15 pm

UCSUR's 1st Floor Conference Room

3343 Forbes Ave.

(Across Forbes from Magee-Women's Hospital)

Collaborative planning can bring together wide-ranging interests that sometimes think that they have little in common. This presentation looks at the planning process for a neighborhood corridor revitalization project on Cleveland's city-suburb border engaging multiple community-based institutions and agencies through a planning workshop project carried out by college and high school students. Although still a work-in-progress, this planning process illustrates some of the important potential short-term and long-term benefits of collaborative planning.

Jordan Yin, Ph.D. is the Director of Undergraduate Programs for the Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs at Cleveland State University. He received a Ph.D. in City and Regional Planning from Cornell University and is the author of "Urban Planning for Dummies" - one of Planetizen's 10 best planning books of 2013. He was formerly the Research Director at the Center for Competitive Workforce Development at Duquesne University

RSVP: 412-624-9177, or pncis@pitt.edu

University of Pittsburgh

University Center for Social and Urban Research